From the New York Evening Post. We have no fear, then, of war with excitement. Should the British government act precipitately, and repudists the effort for a settlement as we should expect from it, there would still be no call for hostilities on our pirk. Its crime would be against its own honor and dignity, and we should have no occasion to constitute ourselves the apardians and constitute ourselves the guardisns and avengers of these. The moral strength of the position in which we should stand ba-fore the world, by calmly and steadily adhering to our rights and our duties, equally without faltering and without menace, would be no small recompense for the loss of any sum of money that the arbitrators might have swarded is. Arbitration, where one side refuses in advance to accept the vardies if it goes against them is worse than ridica-tons—and if the Queen's address, Mr. Gladstone's speech, the apparently unsel our sentiment of the house of commons and the equally ananimous sentiment of the press mean anything at all, England will not pay the indirect claims, no mat-ter what the refusal may bring. From the New York Herald. This, then, is our case; and we now see how Englands regards it. When the Queen and the prime minister feel called upon to make a declaration. We may reason that they speak for England. But no less does our President speak for the United States. If Gladstone and Diarasi unite in a policy of menace, we, on our part—Democrat and Republican—will unite in a policy of proud and resolute resistance. There never was a clearer case of injustice upon one side, and kindness, courtesy and good feeling on the other. General Grant might us well propose to repeal the emandpation proclamation; to remand the thirteen States into a condition of colonial dependence upon Queen and the prime minister condition of colonial dependence upon Great Britain; to strike twenty stars out of our flag; to do, in fact, any impossible or dishonorable thing, as to withdraw his care from the tribunal elected to decide it.
